Man is Freedom. What Sartre is really describing (when he talks about Man) is a being with a free will. If we had an essence or a nature, we could not really be free. If we are free, we have no essence, no human or individual nature. We are nothing but our choices.

Review: Do we have a free will? Can we believe that we don't?

This freedom to choose was the basic right that Americans always prized so highly. It was the simple freedom that my early teacher Betsy always loved to talk about. It was synonymous with Americanism and symbolized what we wanted for the whole world. But the sad truth is that this freedom to choose has been crowded out and is dying of neglect.
